A butterfly, 'brown hairstreak', feeds on my leaves,

The brewer of the household, will be quite pleased,

After my pollinators visit, where they make such a din,

Their efforts will fruit, to flavour delicious gin.

What am I? Pwy ydw i?

I'm nutritious and delicious, but you might be shy to try - the acid in my hairy leaves could sting your skin and make you cry.

That's my defense against the sheep but butterflies don't care - comma and tortoiseshell caterpillars will munch until my stalks are bare.

I'm strong as rope and soft as cloth and make a dye of green -

I'm so useful, please forget my reputation for being mean!

I am food for fungus, make nuts for the birds, and some humans use my leaves for gin, so I've heard!

Tall, smooth and graceful, I grow in the shade - from my creamy white wood, old books were once made.

Often left in the shade, and cut down to stools.

I spring back with vigour for flexible purpose.

My kernels of wisdom can be set free with tools.

I provide bed and board to a sleepy wee mouse.
